Quarantine doesn't stop Feast of Words recognition of faculty authors

A Feast of Words 2020, an annual celebration by the Emory Center for Faculty Development and Excellence for faculty authors and editors in honor of the books they published that year, couldn't be held due to pandemic restrictions. But CFDE found another way to recognize these faculty – it created a video, with the help of Emory Libraries and University Communications, that includes a message from President Fennes, interview snippets with several authors, and a scrolling list of all the authors and their published titles.

The list features 90 titles and 33 faculty members among the authors and editors, including a librarian – Sarah Morris, English librarian and the head of instruction and engagement. Enjoy the video presentation and peruse the printed list of authors and titles at the link below.
