Print Accessibility Options and Resources for Library and Course Materials
Woodruff Library and Office of Accessibility Services
Fall 2024

All e-books made accessible by the Emory Libraries should be available via Library Search. Please reach out to Chris Palazzolo (cpalazz@emory.edu) if there are questions about access.

NB: Most, but not all, ebooks held by the Emory Libraries accessible will have both PDF and HTML options for reading and meet accessibility requirements for screen-reading (e.g., EBSCO, JSTOR), The HTML options are better for screen readers, although most new PDFs are now JAWS accessible, and are tagged for readers. EPubs are also good possibilities. Ideally, a non-DRM (Digital Rights Management) copy is preferable, as there are now restrictions on page downloads, no special software required, etc.

Other options for acquiring accessible copies:
EMMA. Any user can check if an e-version is available, but only a manager can download the content. Currently, the vast majority of texts are sourced by the Internet Archive (IA). Any copies downloaded must only be shared with the user. Note that for textbooks, only some editions might be available.

Bookshare can be searched by any user, but an administrator must "download" the title for the user and add ("assign") to their bookshelf and/or send the downloaded copy to the student via a shared folder. Note that .doc files are the best files for use with Bookshare (often no PDF option).

Bibliovault is a good source for university press titles. All requests for an accessible copy must be completed by an OAS or library administrator. Best to first check the library catalog first.

The library may also purchase a reasonably priced e-copy (if available), you may submit a request for possible purchase of an e-copy: https://libraries.emory.edu/services/request-purchase. This option may be worthwhile to make the title more accessible to all users. Note that textbooks in e-format are often not available as an e-version for library purchase. Most e-book orders take 3-4 business days to be fulfilled.

--Chris Palazzolo, Director of Collections and Open Strategies, Woodruff Library